brated 54 years of marriage before her husband died at 88.

Throughout her time in the region, Banks was involved in civil rights movements becoming a lifetime member of the NAACP and a founding member of Gainesville Women for Equal Rights. She also co-founded the Millhopper Cooperative Nursery School, after her son was denied access at an all-white preschool.

She was appointed by Florida Gov. Bob Graham to the Governor’s Commission on Post Secondary-Education in 1979.

As the University of Florida began to integrate their college she and her husband rallied to organize support for African Americans who wanted to go into med school. Banks organized events for social activities, enrichment sessions, medical care and fundraiser for scholarships.

only person who voted against the proposal, said she is concerned about putting another measure on the November ballot due because it could hurt the chances of the Wild Spaces & Public Places sales tax extension passing.

“I think people may support something (on a housing bond) when they see a fully fleshed out, fully developed proposal,” she said. “I think that could gain some traction.”

The Wild Spaces & Public Places ballot question in November calls for extending the half-cent sales tax for environmental preservation and park projects. The proposal is being paired with another half-cent infrastructure surtax to pay for road paving, upgrades to public safety facilities and land for affordable housing projects.

Both will be decided by voters countywide.

While the commissioners generally supported the the affordable housing bond proposal, several pushed back on placing the item on the upcoming ballot, an issue that remains unanswered at this time.

“I do think that ultimately this (bond) can be a significant part of our overall affordable housing strategy, so I want to continue to learn more and find out how it can be used,”

Mayor Lauren Poe said. “Unless I’m just blown away by what I see (from staff) in July, I’m highly unlikely to vote to put it on the November ballot.”

Commissioners Reina Saco and Harvey Ward also said they feared the plan would feel rushed and would prefer the question be poised to voters in 2024.

“The process of preparing to put a bond issue on the ballot should include months or years of conversation,

In 2003, Banks was honored by Santa Fe College as a woman of distinction for her work in the community, such as driving bringing food to families in need and counseling teen parents.

But to those who knew her best, she was “mom.”

Banks leaves behind three children: Barry Banks, 62, Garry Banks, 59, and Colleen Banks, 58.

“Although she seemed to be very outgoing and a gregarious person she loved being at home, decorating her home, painting and performing yardwork – that’s what she loved,” Colleen Banks said.

They describe their mother as a detailed and time-sensitive person who once got a speeding ticket because she didn’t want to be late to her doctor’s appointment.

“And you can’t forget her laugh,” Colleen said. “She had a contagious laugh.”

Banks’ funeral will be held at 3 p.m. at the Greater Bethel AME Church. The family asks that in lieu of flowers monetary contributions be made to the Shands Kidney Transplant Program or Cullen W. Banks M.D. Scholarship, University of Florida Foundation.

and we would only have weeks to prepare to place it on the November ballot,” Ward said in an email. “So I support a report that would begin the conversation, but I do not believe we are prepared to ask the people to approve a large housing bond for this November.”

City staff is preparing to outline exactly how much of the $30 million to $50 million in bond revenues would be spent on affordable housing preservation and new affordable housing projects, as well as identify income limits for those qualifying for housing, Hayes-Santos said.

“They are also coming back with information about what would be the costs for the bonds for our taxpayers, the yearly costs – all the information for us to move forward on the housing bond to make sure we could build housing for our lowest-income individuals,” Hayes-Santos said.

Hayes-Santos also suggested combining the bond funds with those offered by nonprofits and the Gainesville Housing Authority, allowing more than 1,200 affordable housing units to be built.

Scott Winzeler, chief outreach and development officer for Alachua Habitat for Humanity, said Tuesday that the bond revenues combined with Habitat dollars could increase the number of affordable homes the program offers.

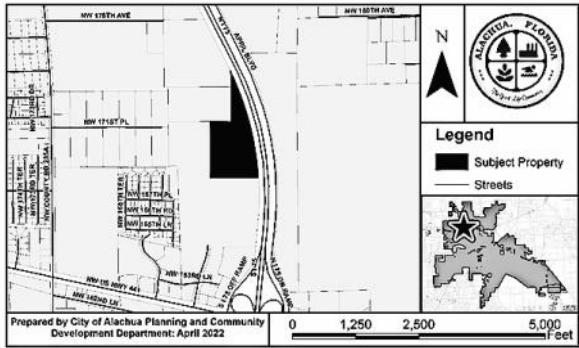

“Obviously, it would be a great opportunity for people like us in the affordable housing sphere,” he said.

Kim Tanzer, a former UF architecture professor and former dean of the University of Virginia’s School of Architecture, said Wednesday that it would be too early to ask voters in November if they support the bond.

“(City officials) need to have a plan before they bring it to the voters, which is what the staff report told them,” she said. “Cities with established goals and strategies have had some success. We do not have any meaningful goals or strategies this time as a city.”
