goals include advocating for ballot initiatives like the School Board of Alachua County Infrastructure Sales Tax, which calls for a half-cent, 12-year sales tax to improve school facilities, and the GRU Governance referendum to establish a local governing body for Gainesville Regional Utilities — which hasn't come without controversy.

The City of Gainesville canceled its six chamber memberships in July after it, along with at least some of 106 organizations, accidentally paid chamber invoices that included a $50 donation for the chamber's PAC, Gainesville Regional Business PC.

In recent years, the PAC has funded campaigns for political candidates and local ballot initiatives, including the GRU referendum the city commission made clear it opposed.

The city had been a chamber member for 30 years.

Mayor Lauren Poe said he hopes the city can later rejoin the chamber, if it changes its billing process.

Kevin Monroe, chairman of the Gainesville Area Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, said the board hopes to name an interim president before Davenport's departure.

Davenport starts her new role in September.
