utilities plan to shift to single-serve packaging of food and revamp sleeping arrangements for restoration crews that could require single occupancy in hotels or need for more smaller sleeper vehicles.

They also cautioned that post-storm recovery assistance from utility crews based in other states might not be as large as in past years, as each state deals with issues related to the coronavirus.

Florida's emergency-management division has also been taking internal steps to ward off its own disaster fatigue.

"We're making sure that we're rotating people on and off on weekends to give them time off with their families," Moskowitz said. "Obviously, we're boosting morale around here. We're letting people bring their dogs to work. Because, look, mental health is an important aspect of what we do around here. We've been working 18-hour days since the beginning of March."

Institute, a non-partisan research organization, said that sales tax losses, alone, could soon hit $800 million-a-month, initially caused by the coronavirus shutdown but then followed by rising unemployment, which will slow tourist visits and consumer spending.

Florida's unemployment rate hit 12.9% in April, less than the national 14.7% level. But jobless numbers across the country are expected at least to near 16% by mid-summer, which will have its own jarring effect on Florida's tourist-driven economy.

"In other words, as people from other states face job losses and are unable to travel to Florida, tourism-generated economic activity and the state's revenue suffers," said Robert C. Osborne, board chair of the Florida Policy Institute.

Florida Republican leaders, though, are holding out hope for an economic bounce back. They say that tax collections will begin showing signs of recovery with restaurants, retailers and other businesses coming back to life, even at reduced levels.

"Our ability to successfully navigate the current fiscal situation will require the same deliberate, professional, fact-based decision making we have employed in Florida for decades," Senate President Bill Galvano, R-Bradenton, said in a memo to senators after the monthly revenue numbers were released Tuesday.

Galvano also pointed out that while April's report showed collections plummeting, the state actually was over-estimate on collections by $202.4 million for the first quarter of the year, somewhat easing the slap of that one-month plunge.

While Republicans don't seem eager to read-dress policy and spending decisions in a special session, some longtime allies of GOP leadership are urging dramatic steps.

Florida TaxWatch, the business-backed research organization, cited the decline in tax collections as a reason to urge lawmakers to work on a new revenue-producing gambling compact with the Seminole Tribe and to authorize the state to collect taxes on e-commerce and remote vendors.

Both approaches could draw hundreds of millions of dollars into the state's pandemic-battered treasury.

"We cannot afford continued inaction on these critical issues," said TaxWatch President and CEO Dominic Calabro. "Today, we again urge the Florida Legislature to take decisive action and activate these needed revenue sources, which will increase collections dramatically and help ensure a strong recovery for the Sunshine State."

Farmer, the Senate's incoming Democratic leader, also said that when it comes to potential budget cuts, his party wants to shield priorities that he fears Republicans would be prone to slash.

"For the first time in this budget, we didn't balance our books on the backs of hard-working Floridians," Farmer said. "But the big fear here is that if it's left to a non-transparent process, the lobby corps will swoop in and these books will get balanced by taking away money that Floridians need the most."
